Site chooses city as one of the few to house a Spaces studio

Jessica Smith Cross
Metro | Toronto

Toronto is getting a space for YouTubers to create #content.

The city joins Mumbai as one of the newest places tapped for what are known as YouTube Spaces — places where creators can produce videos and attend workshops and programs.

The company already has make-it-yourself spaces in six cities around the world, with the Toronto space announced during last week's VidCon online video convention in California. Details about when it will open and where haven't been released.

Toronto YouTuber Lauren Riihimaki is among those ready to see it up and running.

"There'd been rumours about it, but I'm so happy to hear it's happening," said Riihimaki, who is one of the city's big names on YouTube.

Her channel about do-it-yourself projects, LaurDIY, has more than two million subscribers.

Others who've made a name for themselves include Evan Fong, who's amassed 13.4 million subscribers on his VanossGaming channel, and comedian Lilly Singh, better known as IISuperwomanII with more than six million subscribers.

Riihimaki said the new space will help bring Toronto's YouTube community closer together, and help keep them here — away from the lures of places like L.A.

"Oh my god, the Toronto community is so amazing," Riihimaki said. "I think it's because there's not a lot of us, and it's pretty small. We all support each other no matter what the channel size is."

Riihimaki graduated from Ryerson in April, and her YouTube career is serious — she has a management team, creates one high-production video a week and frequently travels.

YouTube's existing spaces are well used, producing more than 10,000 videos that as of March 2015 had generated more than one billion hits, spokeswoman Jennifer Kaiser said.

City set to host biggest Parapan Am Games ever

PAN AM 2015

1600 para-athletes from 28 countries will participate

Jessica Smith Cross
Metro | Toronto

There's still more to come.

Now the Pan Am Games are over, Toronto is getting ready for the Parapan Am Games.

They begin Aug. 7 and most of the Parapan athletes will be arriving in Toronto when the Athletes' Village reopens on Sunday and on Monday, said Heather Irwin, a spokeswoman for the TO2015 organizing committee.

On Monday, the Parapan Am Games Torch Relay will begin, with 250 torchbearers visiting 12 communities, she said.

"For the first time in torch relay history, two separate Parapan Am flames will be lit during special ceremonies in Ottawa and Niagara Falls, with the flames uniting in Toronto for the Parapan Am Opening Ceremony."

In the meantime, work is underway to open the new Abilities Centre in Whitby and transition the 11 other venues that will hosting the 15 Parapan Am sports. That work includes getting the fields of play ready for the Parapan sports, and making changes for additional accessibility at some venues.

The TORONTO 2015 Parapan Am Games will be the largest ever, with more than 1,600 para-athletes from 28 countries, with the help of more than 8,400 volunteers for the Parapan Am Games, said Irwin.

CBC

Vulgar phrase shouted at reporter

Toronto Police are investigating a vulgar insult hurled at CBC journalist Charlsie Agro while she was on air covering the Pan Am Games closing ceremonies.

Agro was speaking live on-air on Sunday night about how she was impressed with the performances of Canadian female athletes when the phrase "F— her right in the p—" was shouted out twice.

She said she isn't sure if it was the same man who called out the phrase both times on Front Street, outside the CBC headquarters.

By the time her live report was completed, a man was running away from her down the street, she said. Another man and woman, who appeared to be with him, were still nearby and Agro said she caught them on video. She said she approached nearby police officers and told them of the incident.

They agreed on which photos should be tweeted out, she said.

Shortly after 1 a.m. on Monday, Agro tweeted: "There we go. Please RT. Reviewing footage with @TorontoPolice @TPSTauro needs your help. #stopFHRITP."

"CBC has given me all the support I need to move on in whatever way we chose," she said. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Reg Hartt is the latest to strike in an ongoing postering war with James Gillis. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

War of the posters

METRO EXPLAINS

Two men have been waging ugly public battle for years

Jessica Smith Cross
Metro | Toronto

"Is it Time to Exterminate Jamie the Rat?"

The question asked on a series of posters stapled across downtown is the latest salvo in a poster war between two men: James Gillis and Reg Hartt.

Gillis runs Dr. Jamie's Police Bike Auction in The Junction and Dr. Jamie's Events, a company that is paid to put up event posters around Toronto. Reg Hartt, a film archivist, covers the city with his own posters advertising screenings and discussions at The Cineforum, run out of his Bathurst Street home.

Both men have been putting up nasty personal posters about the other for years. Hartt launched the latest attack in the war about two weeks ago, deploying posters calling Gillis a "rat" and making a potentially libelous, serious criminal accusation against him.

But, Hartt alleges, Gillis was the first to strike in the long-running feud.

Hartt claims Gillis has been putting up "vile, slanderous" posters about him and other people he doesn't like since 2000 — and his posters about "Jamie the Rat" are only revenge.

Hartt alleges Gillis put up posters about a homeless man who once worked for Gillis five years ago, calling him a "rat" and a police informant, which Hartt alleges made him a target for violence.

Three years ago, posters went up that included an allegation against Hartt, and Hartt claims Gillis is responsible for them along with harassing emails and calls to his home making the same claim.

After that, Hartt decided to fight posters with posters, and has since papered the city offering a reward to anyone who breaks Gillis's legs or kills him.

They're not actually threats, Hartt claims, just parodies of Gillis's "deadly serious" posters about him and others, he said.

Metro contacted Gillis via email and, while he declined to answer most of the questions asked, he did say he's gone to police about Hartt's posters offering a reward for his death. No charges have been laid.

"The only thing that has happened is he's changed the design of the flyers that are offering monies to cause me bodily harm," Gillis wrote.

Doors close for good on Just Desserts

Georgina Leimonis
TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

The legendary Toronto franchise Just Desserts is shelving its baking pans and capping its cacao liqueurs for the last time this weekend.

The once-tony nightspot has seen dwindling customers and rising rents gnaw away at its profit margins, reducing the number of outlets from about three dozen in the mid-1990s to one today, franchisee Richard Fernandes told Torstar News Service.

A harbinger of hip to the late-night dessert scene two decades ago, Just Desserts is also indelibly linked to the notoriously botched robbery that saw the fatal shooting of patron Georgina (Vivi) Leimonis in 1994.

On April 5 of that year, three young men burst through the doors of the original restaurant at Davenport and Bedford roads shortly after 11 p.m., demanding cash and jewelry from the 32 patrons. In the confusion that followed, one of the men, Lawrence Brown, hit Leimonis with two shotgun blasts to the chest.

She died in hospital several hours later.

On Monday, the smell of brownie waffles wafted across the tables of the Yonge Street location, the last member of an all-but-extinguished family. There, just north of Wellesley Avenue, Fernandes served up a Southern Comfort-based coffee concoction, as he has for the past 20 years.

"It was so sad," he said of Leimonis's death at the Annex establishment in April 1994, which he was not affiliated with. "But sadly or ironically, it actually catapulted (Just Desserts) into a more popular place. I hate to say it, but that's the honest truth."

On the day of the shooting, the franchise was approaching the height of its success, with more than 25 franchises around the GTA and revenue in the multimillions. It continued to expand through the mid-1990s despite the bloody blemish on its name.

Fernandes was one of several franchisees who sought a piece of the business the year following the tragedy.

"Desserts, I just think it's being saturated now, though. You go to all the fancy restaurants, they have pastry chefs working there, and Rabba, Metro, Loblaws too," he said.

Model seeks a new path in life after losing her jaw to cancer

SURVIVAL

Treatment was complicated by little Valentin in her womb

At first she thought it was a toothache. Her jaw was tender and swollen. She visited several dentists who refused to take X-rays because she was newly pregnant.

"We went to Mount Sinai Hospital, and they told me to come back in my second trimester," Elizaveta Bulokhova says from her Vaughan home.

That was last July. The pain got worse. In September, Bulokhova was finally X-rayed. The results sent the young fashion model's life into a tailspin.

"The cancer was just eating all of my jaw," the 26-year-old says. "I was in shock."

Born in Latvia, Bulokhova moved to Toronto with her family at the age of 12. As soon as she finished high school, she jetted to Taiwan to kickstart her modeling career.

"I felt really great in front of the camera," Bulokhova reminisces. "I felt myself."

Bulokhova found work in places like Hong Kong, Japan, London, New York and South Africa. She appeared in magazines like Cosmopolitan, Flare and Harper's Bazaar, modeling products for Fila, Hugo Boss, L'Oréal and Redken.

"If you meet models, most of them are insecure," Bulokhova laughs, remembering old casting calls — hundreds of pretty girls vying to be chosen.

"I was just like everyone else," she adds. "All girls have some insecurities."

In October, Bulokhova was diagnosed with osteogenic sarcoma — a rare form of bone cancer that was consuming her jawbone. That month, doctors at the University Health Network removed 95 per cent of her infected jaw in an operation that lasted 16 hours. In this and several follow-up procedures, a titanium plate and bone from Bulokhova's right leg was used to rebuild her jawbone. Nerves and skin tissue were also taken from her leg, arm, hip and shoulder to recreate her mouth and allow her lips to move and feel.

All of this happened while Bulokhova was still pregnant.

> I want to find a way to do what I love to do with the way I am.
> Elizaveta Bulokhova

Her wounds healed slowly, delaying the aggressive chemotherapy she needed to rid her body of cancer — chemotherapy that would have killed the fetus. With her jaw wired shut, she was forced to eat through a tube inserted in her nose. Bulokhova's doctors talked about the need to terminate the pregnancy. Her body was a latticework of wires and tubes.

On Bulokhova's insistence, her doctors tried — and failed — to induce labour.

Then, on Dec. 16, just days before she was to finally begin chemotherapy, Valentin was born by caesarian section. He was 10 weeks premature.

"I guess he wasn't too happy to come out so early, but when I heard him crying, it made me smile because I knew he was good," Bulokhova says, cradling her healthy seven-month-old son in her arms. "One week after, my Christmas dinner started with a cocktail of chemotherapy."

Elizaveta Bulokhova, 26, and seven-month-old Valentin at their home in Vaughan. Valentin was delivered by C-section at 7.5 months, just one week before Bulokhova, a former model, began chemotherapy for a rare form of bone cancer that saw most of her jaw replaced. CONTRIBUTED

Valentin spent several weeks in an intensive-care unit. Bulokhova endured crippling chemotherapy until the end of April.

There's still work to do. Because of bacterial contamination, the titanium in Bulokhova's jaw needs to be replaced with one of her ribs. Bulokhova will also receive dental implants for her new lower jaw. Doctors, meanwhile, will continue to monitor her to make sure the cancer doesn't recur.

Bulokhova remains positive. She credits her family and longtime boyfriend and father of her child for helping her endure the constant pain, small triumphs and daily humiliations of her protracted recovery.

"My goal is to be happy," Bulokhova says simply. "I just make a celebration out of every day."

In May, Manolo Ceron, a local photographer and friend of Bulokhova's, invited the model to his studio for her first photo shoot since her cancer diagnosis. The resulting images highlight the scars that now crisscross Bulokhova's body.

Bulokhova says she was thrilled to be in front of a camera again. Much, however, remains uncertain about her future.

"I want to find a way to do what I love to do with the way I am," she says.

As she ponders her future, she stays at home caring for Valentin while her partner travels for work.

"After all of this, you kind of start to understand that looks just don't really matter," she says, her new mouth smiling.

"We forget to love ourselves for who we are, to work on our personality more, you know — because that's what shines and makes us beautiful."

7 THINGS FACTS AND MYTHS ABOUT BEATING THE HEAT

True or False? The heat is finally on in Toronto. After a cooler-than-usual start to the summer, temperatures are expected to hover around 30 C until at least Thursday, with the humidex edging towards 40 C. As the city collectively reaches for a cool glass of water, Metro has you covered with some truths — and falsehoods — about beating the heat. LUKE SIMCOE METRO

1 Heat alerts only apply to young children and the elderly

False. Dr. Christine Navarro with Toronto Public Health says hot temperatures and humidity can affect anyone, regardless of age or health. While seniors and children are more vulnerable to heat stress, so too is anyone who works outside or has a chronic respiratory condition like asthma, she said.

2 You can be dehydrated without feeling thirsty

True. Thirst is actually a poor indicator of how hydrated you are. "By the time you're thirsty, you've already lost some fluids," Navarro said. Rather than trust your thirst, it's better to be proactive and drink water consistently throughout the day.

3 Eating spicy food cools you down

True. Chowing down on some spicy food makes your body sweat, which helps you cool down. However, this only works if your sweat is able to evaporate quickly, so things like humidity, a lack of air circulation or too many clothing layers will detract from any relief.

4 Heat is relative

True, sort of. A report from the American Academy of Family Physicians found people who spend more time in warmer temperatures acclimatize. In fact, the report concludes that heat waves in northern U.S. cities result in more casualties because people simply aren't accustomed to the temperatures.

5 Cleanliness is next to coolness

True. Taking a dip in the lake, or just in your bathtub, is a great way to stay cool. According to Navarro, research shows that people who take more frequent showers are less likely to suffer adverse heat effects in the summer.

6 Colder is always better

False. While your first reaction to the heat wave may be to crank your air conditioner to the coldest setting, Navarro says it's not really necessary. "You just need to lower the temperature a little bit," she said, noting anywhere between 23 C and 27 C is acceptable indoors.

There's also no consensus on whether cold water is more effective at cooling you down than tepid — or even hot — drinks. A number of studies have shown cold drinks lower your core temperature more than hot ones, but research out of the University of Ottawa has found warmer drinks cause you to sweat, which can also cool you down.

7 Sports drinks can help you beat the heat

False. Sports drinks can help you recover electrolytes after a workout, but when it comes to rehydrating, water is still your best bet. In fact, some branded sports drinks contain excess sugar or caffeine, which can make you more thirsty. "Water does pretty much everything you need it to," said Environment Canada's Geoff Coulson.

TALLBOY

Drinking in Trinity Bellwoods? Yes, there's an app for that.

Tallboy is a new iOS app that lets visitors to one of the city's most popular parks skirt bylaws about drinking in public.

By tapping on a map, users can alert their fellow drinkers to police presence in the park.

"Tallboy is an app that is specifically geared to people who frequent parks in Toronto. Using the app you can communicate reports of 'people' that may interrupt or deter you from enjoying an ice cold beverage," reads the app's iTunes page.

It's unknown how many people have downloaded the app since it was released last week.

Toronto police Const. Victor Kwong said nothing about Tallboy is illegal.

"Our officers will continue to patrol and respond to community complaints, and continue to use discretion during enforcement of the bylaws," he said.

In 2011, Toronto police condemned those who tweeted out RIDE (Reduce Impaired Driving Everywhere) stop locations, but Kwong said Tallboys is less of a concern.

"RIDE spot checks are different. They are placed so high in the interest of public good that it is written in law that police may randomly and arbitrarily stop a car without even so much as a suspicion," he said.

"Drinking in a park, in contrast, is a bylaw."

Ontarians in poverty left with $50 a month for groceries

Gilbert Ngabo
Metro | Toronto

A group of Toronto advocates is challenging Kathleen Wynne's government to increase welfare payments, a move that's seen as "crucial" in the fight to end dependence on food banks.

Representatives of Put Food in the Budget are touring communities in northeastern Ontario this week, meeting with locals and discussing poverty issues.

People living on social assistance in those areas face a high cost of living — housing and hydro being among the steepest bills — leaving them with meager budgets for food, said campaign organizer Mike Balkwill.

People from northeastern Ontario display some of their thoughts on social assistance and food issues. CONTRIBUTED

"We are meeting a lot of people who have only $50 a month to spend on groceries," said Balkwill, speaking Monday from Moosonee. "That's a buck and half a day."

Through the tour, the group has learned there are several factors that make food accessibility a complex issue. Most of it travels a long way to get to the areas the group is visiting, and many communities have only a single grocery store, making price competition non-existent, Balkwill said.

Relying on food banks doesn't help much either. Balkwill said most food banks in the communities in question are open only once a month, due to limited resources, and give out enough food to last about three days.

Sometimes they are located far away from the people who need help and are understaffed.

Five elderly people who've served at the Kapuskasing food bank for 11 years told the group they are closing soon, he said.

The Liberal government may pride itself on having raised social assistance rates nearly 20 per cent over the past 12 years, but the cost of living "has gone up by 25 per cent in the same period," said Balkwill.

"There is nothing for them to be proud of," he said. "Nobody in ... as Ontario should have to go to a food bank to get their food."

At-fault accidents can cause your car insurance premiums to rise. Here is one easy way you can lower them again.

Even the best drivers have their bad days. If you recently got into a car accident, the bad news is your insurance rates could increase. The good news is insurance providers treat accidents differently. Just because your current insurance provider increased your rates it does not mean another one will not offer you a better deal. Using a site like InsuranceHotline.com, you can quickly compare quotes from more than 30 providers, helping you to ensure you are still getting the best rate available.

Now's the perfect time for drivers to compare rates

How is your insurance going to change?

If you are found to be at fault or partially at-fault, you will likely see an increase in your premiums. The amount of this increase varies from company to company. Some insurance providers offer accident forgiveness where you are essentially forgiven, meaning your first accident will not affect your premiums. If you have already used this exemption, you do not qualify, or your current provider does not offer it, now is a good time to compare rates. Just because your car is a wreck it does not mean your insurance premiums have to be too!

LCBO facing brew battle

COURTS

Distillery pays out nearly half its retail price

A Toronto craft distillery known for its unaged whiskey and organic beet spirits is suing the LCBO, claiming the public alcohol monopoly's markup on each bottle of booze sold is "unconstitutional."

While the tax on beer and wine is set out in the Alcohol and Gaming Act, Charles Benoit, a co-founder of the Toronto Distillery Company, says the LCBO unilaterally imposes a tax of 45.9 per cent on every bottle he sells at his distillery without any basis in law.

"Taxes must be voted upon by legislators," said Benoit, who previously worked as a lawyer in Washington, D.C. "It's one of the core precepts of responsible government: they didn't want the unelected governing council just imposing taxes on a whim.

"We totally accept that they're going to get revenue from distilling. That's inevitable. But it should be done via legislation. The members of the legislature, we are able to talk to them. But we have no idea who came up with this LCBO spirits policy."

Toronto Distillery Company co-founders Charles Benoit, left, and Jesse Razaqpur, both lawyers, are suing the LCBO on an "unconstitutional tax." CHRIS SO/TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Citing the ongoing litigation, the LCBO and the Ontario government declined to comment for this story.

The Toronto Distillery Company, which has been distilling small batch organic spirits in the Junction since 2013, had a popular unaged whiskey that sold well at the LCBO in December of that year. Since then, the company has struggled to get another product onto liquor store shelves and has turned to selling bottles directly to the public at its distillery near St. Clair Avenue West and Keele Street.

> "I see no viable future ... in a system that demands a king's ransom.
> Charles Benoit

In the lawsuit filed in Superior Court last week, Benoit writes that he has to pay the LCBO $12.44 for every bottle of gin he sells at $26.85. This levy is the same amount he would have to pay if the bottle was sold at an LCBO store, despite the fact that the public corporation doesn't have to incur any warehousing or retailing costs.

Wine and beer producers are taxed differently depending on their size. In B.C. no taxes are imposed on a distillery's first 50,000 litres. Nova Scotia and Saskatchewan have similar sliding scales for small liquor producers. But without comparable provisions in Ontario, Benoit says craft distillers will be forced to purchase alcohol in bulk on the international market in order to make ends meet.

"We actually distill what we sell. We're not just running private liquor stores," he said. "I see no viable future for small-batch grain-to-glass distilling in a system that demands a king's ransom percentage from every bottle a distillery distills, bottles, markets and retails itself."

TRANSPORTATION

HOV lanes heat up

Starting Tuesday, you'll just need just two people in your car to avoid a ticket in HOV lanes.

During the Pan Am Games this month, high occupancy vehicle lanes were restricted to vehicles carrying at least three occupants, as well as taxis and buses.

The province designated 235 kilometres of HOV lanes for the Pan Am Games, up from 85 kilometres previously.

Now that the Games are over, the rules on the number of passengers are being relaxed.

Temporary HOV lines will be removed at the end of the Parapan Am Games on Aug. 15.

On Wednesday, Premier Kathleen Wynne said motorists should prepare for HOV lanes to become high-occupancy toll lanes.

That system — dubbed "HOT" — would allow drivers to pay a toll to travel in the speedier lanes if they don't have enough passengers to automatically qualify.

It's still not clear when this would happen or which highways would become "HOT."

MANCHESTER

Have tent, will tutor, Canadian student says

A Canadian student's unorthodox pitch to save money on his university education is helping a British woman to obtain her high school credentials.

Evan Eames's master's studies at the University of Manchester were set to cost the Montreal resident more than $30,000 in tuition fees alone, sending him on the hunt for frugal accommodations.

The avid camper thought pitching a tent in someone's backyard would solve his problem, and so he took to the Internet in search of a landlord.

He found one in Charley Mantack, a Manchester resident who offered to let him pitch his tent on her property in exchange for tutoring in math and science.

Eames spent about three hours a week helping her with her high school equivalency course work. Final exam results are due next month, but Mantack was posting A's in her classes and expects to graduate.

Eames said the inconvenience of living in sporadically damp or cold conditions was balanced by the fresh air and fun of doing something a little out of the ordinary.

"It started out as mainly an economic function, but very quickly it turned into something that I was genuinely enjoying," the 25-year-old said in a telephone interview.

A long-term camp-out was not part of Eames's initial plan when he decided to complete his master's degree outside of Canada.

The British citizenship he enjoys courtesy of his father, he thought, would be sufficient to secure tuition rates more in line with what he would have paid if he remained in Canada.

But after discovering that international rates applied to anyone who had not lived in the country for at least three years, Eames was forced to get creative.

The time he'd previously spent globetrotting on a student budget had made him comfortable with life in a nylon shelter.

Mantack said she plans to go on to university, where she hopes to follow her tutor's lead by studying science.

Pilot rescued from ice floe

ARCTIC

Russian aviator picked up 32 hours after chopper crash

A Russian helicopter pilot survived a crash of his small helicopter into frigid Arctic waters by scrambling into a life raft and then spending over 30 hours awaiting rescue on an ice floe, military officials said Monday.

Sergey Ananov was on a solo, around-the-world journey in his single-engine aircraft and was about halfway between Iqualuit and Greenland when his Robinson R22 helicopter ditched in the Davis Strait on Saturday afternoon.

Rear Admiral John Newton says the search and rescue coordination centre was notified after an on-board beacon indicated Ananov's single-seat aircraft had descended to sea level and stopped moving.

The admiral said the 49-year-old sociologist and journalist had his life raft close at hand and his survival suit was on as it hit the water.

"It's wet, it's cold, he has some polar bear neighbours who are very interested in his whereabouts. He has quite a survival story."

Newton said Ananov fired off flares but they couldn't be seen in the cloudy, misty conditions by rescue aircraft and helicopters that had been dispatched to the scene.

However, early on Monday morning a watchkeeper with the coast guard vessel Pierre Radisson, which had set out from Frobisher Bay to find the lost aviator, spotted one of the flares fired from the floe.

The vessel sent its helicopter to retrieve Ananov, who by then had been on the ice approximately 32 hours.

The admiral said the military search centre worked on the assumption that Ananov was alive throughout the rescue attempt, but knew that heaving oceans and extreme cold posed risks as the hours went by.

"We never gave up on him. There's a combined story of his tale of woe and the determined search by search and rescue ... the coast guard should be proud of what they achieved today," said Newton.

Capt. Wayne Jarvis, who was working at the search and rescue centre at the time of the rescue, said it's believed the cause of the crash was a mechanical problem.

OLYMPIAD

Perfect score for 'mathlete'

The name Alex Song is spoken in reverential tones in Canadian mathematical circles.

The 18-year-old won the International Mathematical Olympiad in Thailand in mid-July, achieving a rare perfect score in the two-day competition against more than 600 high school competitors from 104 countries.

Song has had an incredible run over the past six years, finishing with five gold medals and one bronze against the best in the world.

The Olympiad is a big deal in math. Previous participants have gone on to win prestigious international awards such as the Fields Medal. considered by many as the highest honour in mathematics.

For Song, the Olympiad win wasn't that big of a deal.

"I was definitely very happy at the same time," he says. "But, I mean, it was just whatever happened."

"I felt like I was very lucky to solve all the problems, but at the same time I'm not sure if any of the problems gave me trouble," he said from his parents' home in San Jose, Calif. He grew up in Waterloo, Ont., until moving to New Hampshire to start high school in 2011.

His coach, leader of Math Team Canada, made up for Song's nonchalance.

"The results are fantastic," said a jubilant Jacob Tsimerman, a math professor at the University of Toronto. "Alex is unique and destined for greatness."

The champ will start his collegiate career at Princeton University next month. He said he hopes to focus on pure mathematics and "needs to get prepared for mathematical research." THE CANADIAN PRESS

ELECTION

Liberals call defeat of Adams 'a big favour' for Trudeau

Liberals who helped defeat Eve Adams in her bid to run as the party's candidate in a Toronto riding said Monday they've done Justin Trudeau "a big favour."

Adams had been seeking the Liberal nomination in Eglinton-Lawrence, where she would have faced off against her former Conservative caucus mate, Finance Minister Joe Oliver.

But Adams, who was welcomed into the Liberal fold by Trudeau in February after she had a falling out with the Tories, was handily defeated by Marco Mendicino in a weekend nomination vote.

"I think we did Trudeau a big favour by bringing in and having a candidate here who really is a genuine Liberal," said Mike Colle, a Liberal who represents the riding in the Ontario legislature.

Adams would win the federal nomination "over my dead body," Colle predicted in a Facebook post in February.

But Trudeau will likely continue to be shadowed by the Adams defection throughout the campaign in advance of the Oct. 19 federal election, said University of Toronto political science professor Peter Loewen.

"I think it was a mistake for (Trudeau) ever to invite her in," Loewen said.

Colombia begins quest to unearth missing youths

LA ESCOMBRERA

300 people believed to be entombed in urban landfill

The last contact Margarita Restrepo had with her daughter was a hurried phone call on Oct. 25, 2002. The school day was over and 17-year-old Carol Vanesa was going to meet friends at a metro stop near the sprawling Comuna 13 hillside slum.

Restrepo and her children had fled the violent Medellin neighbourhood a few days earlier, right before it was taken over by thousands of Colombian soldiers trying to ferret out leftist rebels. She begged the girl not to risk returning there, but the teen went anyway. Neither she nor her two friends have been seen again and, to this day, nobody knows who is responsible for their disappearance.

Thirteen years later, Restrepo and dozens of others who have missing loved ones are closer than ever to closure thanks to a project to remove 24,000 cubic metres of rubble from La Escombrera, a debris landfill on Medellin's outskirts where the remains of as many as 300 people are believed to have been dumped during one of the darkest chapters of Colombia's long-running civil conflict.

Wooden silhouettes representing missing people dot the landscape during a ceremony to remember the missing and to kick off a search effort in the landfill La Escombrera, on the outskirts of Medellin, Colombia, on Monday. LUIS BENAVIDES/THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

At a ceremony Monday to remember the missing and kick off the search effort, officials joined more than 100 women who dressed in white and carried black, plastic silhouettes to represent their loved ones. After years of silence on the part of the government and much of society, supporters of the families welcomed the start of the work.

> Roman Catholic priest and activist Javier Giraldo

"This is the site of one of the most atrocious episodes that weigh down our history and is a stain on our national identity before the entire world," Javier Giraldo, a Roman Catholic priest and human rights activist, said following a Mass to honour the victims.

Human rights activists say La Escombrera could prove to be the largest mass grave ever found in Colombia and the dig represents a glimmer of hope that justice will be realized. But the search will be complicated. Despite more than a decade-long clamour by victims' families that the landfill be closed and excavated, giant trucks have continued to dump construction waste daily.

"If that light doesn't shine for me, I hope it does for one of my companions," Restrepo said while holding up a placard with her daughter's photo and disappearance date, the eye-catching symbol used by the group Mothers Walking for the Truth to draw attention to their fight.

With the five-decade conflict winding down, officials have been fanning out across the country to exhume hundreds of bodies, attempt to identify them through DNA testing and return the remains to family members.

Forensic experts have cordoned off and will focus their search in three sections of the landfill where bodies are believed to have been dumped. A makeshift camp is being built for loved ones who want to stay abreast of the investigators' progress.

BOBBI KRISTINA BROWN

Time an issue in solving death

Medical examiners performing an autopsy on Bobbi Kristina Brown said Monday their initial findings turned up no obvious cause of death, while experts said the months that have passed since Brown was found face-down in a bathtub are working against authorities now tasked with solving how she died.

The Fulton County Medical Examiner's Office said in a statement Monday afternoon that it will likely be several weeks before it can rule on a manner and cause of death for the 22-year-old daughter of Whitney Houston.

The agency said its initial autopsy turned up "no significant injuries" or "previously unknown medical conditions." It said the next step is ordering lab tests and issuing subpoenas for documents — most likely Brown's hospital records.

SENTENCING HEARING

Doctor: Mental illness caused Colorado theatre shooting

Defence lawyers trying to spare the life of Colorado theatre shooter James Holmes turned Monday to a court-appointed psychiatrist who previously testified for prosecutors that Holmes was legally sane during the 2012 attack but his mental illness led him to open fire.

Dr. Jeffrey Metzner's finding has not changed: He concluded that Holmes knew right from wrong when he killed 12 people and injured 70 others, therefore meeting the legal definition of sanity under Colorado law. But Metzner also says the attack would not have happened if not for Holmes' mental illness. The defence hopes that will persuade jurors to sentence Holmes to life in prison without parole instead of to death.

"Having psychosis doesn't take away your capacity to make choices. It may increase your capacity to make bad choices," Metzner testified Monday. "He acted on his delusions, and that's a reflection of the severity of his mental illness."

Metzner, who diagnosed Holmes with schizoaffective disorder, said he did not think Holmes went on his rampage to get notoriety or because of his long-standing hatred of humanity, which he described in a spiral notebook. Instead, Metzner said, Holmes' actions were "directly related" to delusions that killing people would increase his self-worth.

"I can come up with no other explanation for what he did," Metzner said.

Holmes knew what he was doing was illegal and that others would think it was wrong, Metzner reiterated in response to questions from District Attorney George Brauchler.

But whether Holmes knew right from wrong matters less now that jurors rejected his insanity plea and convicted him of 165 counts of murder, attempted murder and other crimes stemming from the July 20, 2012 shooting.

Jurors decided unanimously last week that the attack was cruel enough to justify the death penalty, but they must now determine whether Holmes' mental illness and other factors outweigh the gravity of his crimes.

Survey: Millennial females enjoy orgasmic success

Young women are reaching orgasm at a rate that's getting competitive with that of their male counterparts, according to a U.S. survey conducted by condom manufacturing company Ansell.

It could be because this generation of men and women aren't shy about using vibrators and lubricants with one fourth admitting to having tried the former and 43 per cent reporting using the latter routinely.

They're also losing their virginity at a younger age, with 83 per cent of 18 to 24-year-olds reporting having had sex before their 18th birthday. AFP

INDIA

10 people killed in extended gun battle

Indian forces fought an extended gun battle Monday with militants who attacked a moving bus and stormed into a police station in a northern town bordering Pakistan, with 10 people killed in the violence, officials said.

The attackers killed four policemen and three civilians in the pre-dawn attack in Punjab state, said Harcharan Singh Bains, a state government spokesman.

All three of the attackers died in fighting with Indian police officers backed by army personnel that lasted about 12 hours, said the state's director-general of police, Sumedh Singh Saini.

The militants hijacked a car and then fired at the bus and a roadside eatery before attacking a police station near Gurdaspur, a border town in Punjab, police said.

Eight injured people were hospitalized, seven of them in serious condition, the Press Trust of India news agency reported.

Police are investigating whether the militants came from the Indian portion of Kashmir, which borders Punjab, or from Pakistan. Rebels routinely stage attacks in Indian-held Kashmir, where they've been fighting since 1989 for an independent Kashmir or its merger with Pakistan.

Pakistan's foreign ministry condemned the attack. "Pakistan reiterates its condemnation of terrorism in all its forms and manifestations," it said in a statement. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Activists, oil industry clash over in-store screens ads

Executives at Tim Hortons are reconsidering whether it's worth the risk of flavouring your coffee break with potential controversy.

After the restaurant chain was dragged into a clash between environmentalists and oil-industry supporters last month, Daniel Schwartz, CEO of Tim Hortons' parent company Restaurant Brands, said Monday the company is reviewing its Tims TV in-store digital screens.

"We're now taking a look at the whole Tims TV program and what makes sense for the brand," said Schwartz in an interview.

"As with many things in the restaurant, we explore what's best from time to time."

The review comes after Tim Hortons was put in the hot seat for giving advertisement space to pipeline giant Enbridge on its in-store digital screens.

The commercials angered environmentalists who launched an online petition to get them pulled. When Tim Hortons yanked the Enbridge ads, some oil-sector supporters called it an insult to one of Canada's biggest industries and launched their own boycott.

The conflict showed the potential dangers of a brand as recognizable as Tim Hortons selling ad space to companies that could rankle its customers.

The coffee-and-doughnut chain began experimenting with Tims TV last year before rolling out screens at restaurants across the country. The company described Tims TV as its own version of a community space, serving as a home for the latest news, weather, local events and branded videos.

GREECE EURO EXIT

Ex-minister hatched Plan B

The Greek government was poised Monday for the imminent start of intricate bailout discussions but faced rebuke following revelations that former finance minister, Yanis Varoufakis, formed a secret committee to plan for the possible conversion of euros into drachmas "at a drop of a hat."

While the final touches were being put in place for the start of technical talks in Athens, a recording of Varoufakis discussing a parallel currency plan was made public.

Opposition parties have criticized Varoufakis and have urged Prime Minister Alexis Tsipras to explain to lawmakers what he knew of his former finance minister's actions.

Yanis Varoufakis.
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

In the recording of a telephone briefing for investors on July 16 in the wake of his resignation days earlier, Varoufakis claimed he and a childhood friend who was a computer expert hacked into his ministry's computer systems as a first step to creating "a parallel banking system" in the event Greek banks were shuttered.

In theory, a parallel system formed from the effective cloning of tax accounts would have allowed the finance ministry to continue payments in the form of so-called IOUs.

Varoufakis said he had been authorized by Tsipras to undertake the planning prior to the general election in January when the radical left Syriza party swept to power.

And he insisted that his actions were legal, in the public interest and aimed at keeping the country in the 19-country eurozone.

TransAlta manipulated market: Commission
TransAlta Corp. deliberately timed outages at power plants in Alberta at peak times in order to drive up electricity prices, the Alberta Utilities Commission said in a ruling Monday. The commission conducted hearings after the province's market surveillance administrator alleged it manipulated the market by shutting down coal-fired plants in late 2010 and early 2011 to drive up power costs during periods when demand was high. The company has previously denied the allegations, calling them "categorically false".

the big number

Is the number of women who have come forward and attached their names and faces to their stories of alleged sexual assault at the hands of Bill Cosby. The women — the majority of Cosby's accusers, who currently number 46 — range in age from their early 40s to 80 and they report incidents as far back as 1969. They told their stories in New York Magazine on Sunday, describing, in many cases, being drugged without their knowledge and forced to perform sex acts without their consent. A handful of women who reported Cosby in 2005 were met with "skepticism, threats and attacks on their character," the magazine essay says. This time around, praise and support abounds on social media — a testament to how much has changed in just a few years.

I hereby ban the slogan 'People want subways'

YOUR RIDE
Glyn Bowerman

"People want subways" is a too-often-repeated slogan that, when uttered, should incur steep municipal penalties.

Like throwing money into some great civic swear jar.

It's a slogan we heard ad nauseam during the Rob Ford era. Now, with a series of eye-popping investigative pieces by the Star's Jennifer Pagliaro, and council set to vote on the alignment of the Scarborough subway this fall, many obfuscating political types will be going back to the old script.

Because of Pagliaro's work, and earlier investigative work by Spacing Magazine senior editor John Lorinc, we know for a fact that people and council were sold on the idea of the Scarborough subway through a combination of political machinations, warped numbers and misinformation.

Here are the facts: the original LRT plan would have more stops, serve more people in Scarborough and better develop the surrounding area. The subway plan is overly expensive and flashy but comparatively impractical.

So when folks like the impassioned tweeter and pollster Nick Kouvalis — who had a hand in ushering both Ford and John Tory into office — tells media that people have proven their support for the Scarborough clusterfuffle, we cannot possibly roll our collective eyes enough.

That's three bucks in the Scarborough Swear Jar right there.

People want to hear things straight. They always have.

Most people are not city planners with expertise to draw on. Few people have the time or incentive to follow these complex issues, in detail, the way members of the media do. And there are very few local heroes who, out of their sheer love and concern for their community, have taken it upon themselves to fact-check and document this issue, calling out nonsense wherever it appears.

Most people just want the truth from their political leaders. They want someone in charge who will talk to them, honestly, about what's on option and what the stakes are.

On the Scarborough file, we haven't got that from any level of government.

The last municipal election was not a referendum about the Scarborough subway. That election was about a lot of things — mostly about whether or not we've evolved beyond Ford Nation.

Besides, if you're tricked into buying a lemon by a dishonest car salesman, you cannot be said to have made your preferred choice.

People want leadership they can put their faith in. They want reliable government.

The Scarborough subway plan is overly expensive and flashy, but comparatively impractical.

When it comes to Toronto transit, we have been manipulated every which way by an endless parade of opportunistic politicians looking for a quick win.

If you're trying to tell me that's what the people of Toronto "want," I will direct you to the swear jar. Pay up.

We're all jerks on the road. Cyclists are the vulnerable kind

I had that sense again yesterday morning when I got on my bike.

The feeling that I was no more than a delicate teacup perched on the seat. Every motorcycle and car that passed me made me flinch. I shoulder-checked like I had a neck twitch. I'm not a timid rider but I had again the odd foreboding that this could be the day I get hit.

It wouldn't be the first time. A few years ago I was doored — and learned the term doored — en route to the office.

A driver, parked on the side of the road, didn't look for bikes before swinging open his door as I passed him. I flew over the handlebars and skidded to a stop in the middle of the street, mostly unhurt, but shaken.

When cars and bikes collide, one of us always loses.

In 2011, the latest data, colliding with a motor vehicle caused 60 per cent of cyclist deaths in Canada. A University of British Columbia study from 2013 found that cyclists have higher rates of both injuries and deaths than drivers, whether you're looking at number of trips taken or number of kilometres travelled.

I'm not arguing the childish chant that cyclists are better than drivers (and pedestrians are forgotten casualties, like the horses of war, even though they are very much at risk of dying just by walking). Yesterday, as with every morning, cars, buses and trucks vied with pedestrians and other cyclists for biggest a--hole on the road (an award I dole out personally). As of press time, a Toronto pedestrian was the front-runner, thanks to a video making the rounds on Twitter wherein he punches a cyclist in the face.

It's scary out there.

A month ago, I was biking home when a cab driver decided I was too far from the sidewalk (and the crater-sized potholes that hugged the curb) and laid on the horn. He hooooooonnnnnnnkkkkkeeedddd. It scared the hell out of me and left me so sensitive that a podcast I was listening to made me cry.

Yes, Mr. Cab Driver, I realize I've inconvenienced you by forcing you to switch lanes in an otherwise deserted street.

But please pause to consider: Should we collide, you would drive off with a $2,000 repair bill. I would lie there waiting for an ambulance.

In this, one of the statistically most dangerous times of the year to be a cyclist on the road, I beg of you, drivers. Please remember that while we're all jerks on the road, cyclists are the vulnerable kind.

TOUR

L.A. singer Ryn Weaver revels in life on the road

Caroline MacNeille
For Metro

Ryn Weaver is spending the summer in a way most 22-year-olds only dream of — touring the country to play music from her debut album, The Fool.

After dropping out of NYU in 2013, Weaver moved back to California where she connected with Benny Blanco, a producer who has worked with such pop luminaries as Katy Perry, Kesha and Maroon 5 in the past.

After the success of the resulting EP, she hit the festival circuit, with stops at Coachella, SXSW and Bonnaroo. This summer, she's loving connecting with fans on her first solo tour.

Her first tour

"It's been really freaking wild," Weaver says. "The first show I played was this sold-out show in a town where I have a lot of family and friends, and L.A. was sold out, too. I think when you're playing at festivals it's really fun, but it's a lot about winning new fans and having people listen to your music because they wandered over."

Currently in the middle of a tour spanning the U.S. and Canada, Weaver says the connection she makes with fans at solo shows has been very meaningful.

"Every single person at these shows is there because they care about my lyrics and what I'm saying and they all know all the words and they relate. So it's a very comforting experience. It's been very fun for me."

Concept albums

Weaver, who was involved in theatre growing up, might have been inspired by her experiences there — she created the album to be listened to all in one sitting, like a play.

> "Every single person at these shows is there because they care about my lyrics and what I'm saying.
> Ryn Weaver, singer, on connecting with fans during her first solo tour

"I believe in concept albums," she says. "There's something beautiful to be said about pop stars, and the breadth of catchy music that sometimes doesn't even go together but is such a good time anyway. As much as I love that and respect people who can achieve that, I think that I'm naturally a bit more of a storyteller."

That can mean spending a little more time with what she's working on.

"A lot of my favourite artists took their time to make different records. They would fall off the map a bit and come back. So a lot of the music I was listening to always felt like it was coming from a very specific world."

Music videos

To date, Weaver has put out two videos: one for her breakout hit OctaHate and one for her album's namesake, The Fool. Both are esthetic and evocative, featuring unusual, vivid settings (an old house, a gorgeous field) to immerse the viewer in her world. "I always have ideas (for videos) in my head as I write songs. I kind of see the theatre of it."

For these videos, Weaver found inspiration close by.

In OctaHate, that's my best friend Hayley, and we actually came together as friends because of the person the song was written about.

"To me, it represented way more than us having a food fight at the table. It was about overcoming the journey of the mourning process. There's a final hug at the end. It's about how you wrestle with grief and mourning."

Starring roles

Although Weaver is achieving serious success as a musician, she once attended NYU as an acting student.

"Every single form of art is beneficial to another one. In acting, you get to study characters and you get to understand. It's an empathetic art form. It's almost anthropological. I love it."

Ultimately, she moved back to California to pursue music, finding that the West Coast suits her better.

"I love the East Coast, but a number of the (acting) methods break people down to bring them back up. I kind of believe in nurturing the natural side of you that has those qualities. Sometimes I think technique can crush creativity a bit."

RUSH

'40 years is a long time to ... be in a rock band with the same guys'

SOUND CHECK

Alan Cross

I'm standing onstage at the MGM Grand Garden with Lorne Wheaton, the guy Rush's Neil Peart trusts with his drum kits.

"This set," he says, pointing to the kit that Peart has been using for the first half of each show on their 40th anniversary tour known as R40, "is made from an oak tree that was dredged out of the River Olt in Romania. It was carbondated to 1,500 years old. The guys at DW (Neil's preferred drum maker) turned it into this. Amazing, right?"

Lorne spoke of his boss with awe and respect. But and other Rush employees are facing an uncertain future. They know something is going to happen this coming Saturday night. When the lights go up at the end of the show at the LA Forum, the last stop on R40, that might be the last time we ever see Rush onstage.

A Canada — a world — without Rush seems almost inconceivable, but that's exactly what fans may be facing. The band has pushed pause on their career a couple of times in the past, but this time, things look serious. Very serious. There have been rumblings for months that this is definitely The End.

If they wanted to, Rush could extend the R40 tour for months, hitting North American cities they've missed (Winnipeg, Cleveland, Pittsburgh) and returning to cities for additional dates (Toronto, Los Angeles) before heading to across the Atlantic. A European tour would be insanely profitable.

But 40 years is a long time for anyone to do anything, let alone be in a rock band with the same guys playing the same songs, so you can understand why retirement might seem inviting. And it's tempting to go out on top before things start to go pear-shaped. After so many years, you want to leave a legacy that's remembered fondly.

Money? Not an issue. Revenues have been staggeringly good. In addition to raking in millions over the last couple of tours, Rush sold their publishing catalogue for $20 million. No one, and no heir, is going to go without.

It all comes down to a choice we all hope to have at some point in our lives: Do I really want to do this anymore? There are two more shows left on the tour. After Saturday, we'll see what Rush decides.

MICHAEL IAN BLACK

The State star stoked to play SMOSH villain

Ned Ehrbar
Metro | Life

The State and Wet Hot American Summer star Michael Ian Black gets in on the YouTube generation's fun with SMOSH: The Movie, playing eccentric billionaire villain Steve YouTube, who sends the SMOSH guys (Ian Hecox and Anthony Padilla) literally into the Internet to try to undo an embarrassing viral video. And Black, as it turns out, has a handy trick for playing that type of character.

How do you get into the head space of a character like Steve YouTube?
You just act a little bit like a dick, and that's easy for me. I'm just wired to be a little bit of a dick.

It works for you, I think.
Thanks (laughs). I've based an entire career on it.

What do you make of the whole YouTube thing?
Well, I certainly support the ability to create content and put it out there and have people watch it, and YouTube is the premium platform for that. So I guess I'm a big fan.

If you'd had this kind of platform when you were starting out with The State, how different do you think things would have been?
The ability to just create stuff and find an audience so easily probably would have changed everything ... But who knows what the result of that would've been, whether it would've been better or worse.

You could argue a lot of the popular YouTube stuff owes a lot to The State.
Unquestionably, nobody would be where they are were it not for me. I mean me singularly. Just me.

That's fair. Very humble.
I'm trying to keep it as modest as I possibly can.

You've got a lot of TV projects going right now. Why are you on everything?
Well, I'm on three. And it's a result of probably poor or maybe good timing and not any resurgence or renaissance in my career. I don't think. I think my career is still safely in the toilet. That's the hope.

Is that where you're looking to stay?
Well, it's comfortable.

WET HOT AMERICAN SUMMER

Netflix turns the cult classic into a new series
A prequel to the 2001 sleeper hit, Wet Hot American Summer: First Day of Camp will make Netflix subscribers very happy campers starting July 31. The original cast is reunited for eight episodes of goofy hilarity centred on camp counsellor rivalries, summer trysts and the usual scatalogical gags. Fourteen years later, the once unknown cast have all become bankable stars. Bradley Cooper, Paul Rudd, Amy Poehler, Elizabeth Banks and Christopher Meloni, to name a few, reprise their original roles for the reunion, which takes them back to their first day at Camp Firewood. I Am Cait recapped

After weeks of sneak peeks, I Am Cait finally premiered Sunday night on E! If you got caught up in watching Kanye drop his mic at the Pan Am closing ceremony, here are all the juicy scenes from Cait's first episode.

Caitlyn sees her Vanity Fair cover for the first time
In the first few moments in I Am Cait, Caitlyn sees the cover, the cameras capturing her immediate reaction. At the end of the episode, Caitlyn reveals that Khloe Kardashian had some issues with the cover, but you'll have to wait until episode two to find out why.

Kylie Jenner meets Caitlyn
Kylie's first time seeing her father living out a new identity wasn't in person; it was actually over FaceTime, which caught Caitlyn totally off guard. "I don't want to scare you," Caitlyn tells Kylie.

Caitlyn's mom gets honest
Caitlyn's mom and two sisters come to visit, the first time they are seeing each other since the transformation, and Caitlyn's mom doesn't hold back, including asking about a verse on the Bible condemning dressing up in another gender's clothes.

Kim lends fashion advice
Kanye West and a pregnant Kim Kardashian stop by and Kim heads straight to Caitlyn's closet. She doesn't hold back about what Caitlyn needs to ditch. Plus, she pulls out a dress that Kris Jenner also has. Talk about awkward!

Real trans issues addressed
More than anything, the show highlights Caitlyn's big heart. She truly cares about the trans community, especially teens and young adults who are struggling with self acceptance and acceptance from others. Caitlyn spends the afternoon with the family of a trans 14-year-old who committed suicide, and scenes for upcoming episodes feature her going to support groups and addressing important issues.

In the past, the Kardashian enterprise has been written off by many as frivolous, but the latest show to feature the family sparks dialogue that has the potential to change misconceptions and stereotypes.

BROKEN PROMISE — AN EXCERPT IN FOUR PARTS BY LINWOOD BARCLAY

PART 2 OF 4

Something dark has infected Promise Falls
Bestselling thriller author Linwood Barclay returns this month with Broken Promise (Doubleday, July 28, $22.95), the first book in an explosive new trilogy.

When we left David yesterday, he had gone to visit his cousin Marla, who has miscarried just 10 months earlier. David is disturbed when he finds Marla feeding a baby that she claims was brought to her by an angel.

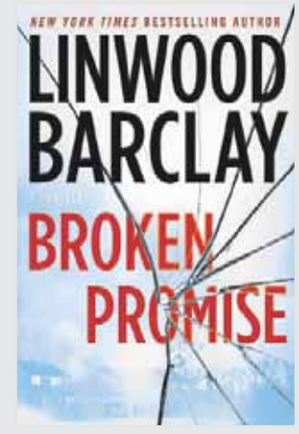
The dog made a beeline for the fence when she caught a whiff of it. Duckworth steeled himself. He'd seen a few dead people over the years.



The name of the caller came up on Promise Falls Detective Barry Duckworth's screen. "Oh, no," he said. "Randall Finley." The former mayor.

"Yeah," Duckworth said.

"Hey, where are you?" Finley asked. "You in your car? Swing by Clampett Park. South end. By the path. There's something here you should see."

Barry Duckworth sighed. "Fine."

"I'll meet you at the park entrance. I got my dog with me. That's how I came across it. I was taking her for a walk."

"It?"

"Just get over here."

"Took you long enough," Finley said as Barry got out of his unmarked cruiser.

"I don't work for you," he said.

"Sure you do. I'm a taxpayer." Finley was dressed in a pair of comfort-fit jeans, running shoes, and a light jacket that he'd zipped up to his neck. "What did you find?"

"It's this way. I could just let Bipsie off the lead and we could follow her."

"No," Duckworth said. "Whatever you've found I don't want Bipsie messing with."

"Oh, yeah, of course," Finley said. "So, how ya been? You lost weight? You're looking good."

"What'd you find, Randy?"

"You just have to see it, is all. Must have happened overnight, because I walk along here with Bipsie a couple times a day — early in the morning, and before I go to bed. The dog made a beeline for the fence when she caught a whiff of it."

Duckworth steeled himself. He'd seen a few dead people over the years, and figured he'd see plenty more before he retired.

Finley pointed. "There, on the fence. Pretty weird, huh? It's a goddamn massacre. You ever seen anything like this before?"

Duckworth said nothing, but the answer was no, he had not. Randall said, "If it had been just one body, or even two, sure, I wouldn't have called. But look how many there are. There's twenty-three of them."

Duckworth counted them himself. Randy was right. One short of two dozen.

Twenty-three dead squirrels. Eleven gray ones, twelve black. Each one with a length of white string, the kind used to secure parcels, knotted tightly around its neck, and hung from the horizontal metal pole that ran across the top of the fence.

"I got no love for them," Finley said. "Tree rats, I call them. But there's gotta be a law against that, right? Even though they're just squirrels?"

In tomorrow's excerpt: David tries to find out more about where Marla got the baby.

Cavs sign Dellavedova for next season

Matthew Dellavedova has hustled his way back to the Cavaliers.

Dellavedova, who emerged as an unlikely post-season hero when all-star guard Kyrie Irving was injured, signed a $1.2-million contract for next season on Monday.

He had been a restricted free agent, and although the Cavs signed Mo Williams this summer to be Irving's primary backup, the team wanted to keep Dellavedova because of the energy he brings off the bench. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Warner given more time in fight to avoid extradition

A court is giving former FIFA vice-president Jack Warner more time to fight being extradited from Trinidad & Tobago to the United States to face corruption charges.

A chief magistrate on Monday set a new hearing date of Aug. 28 after a government lawyer requested more time to examine the extradition request from the U.S. Justice Department. The U.S. sent its request last week.

Toronto's path to hosting Olympics just got 'easier'

SUMMER GAMES

Boston no longer vying for 2024 event

Boston's withdrawal from the race to host the 2024 Summer Olympics could make a potential Toronto bid "far more attractive," particularly if no other American city steps up to the plate, experts said Monday.

"The Boston decision today certainly makes the landscape easier for a Canadian bid, a Toronto bid," said Bruce Kidd, an Olympics expert at the University of Toronto.

"With no U.S. bid, a Canadian bid has a much stronger argument," he said, noting that by 2024, it will have been almost three decades since the 1996 Atlanta Olympics, the last time the Summer Games were held in North America.

A spokesman for the U.S. Olympic Committee said Monday that the organization has severed ties with Boston, where the prospect of a bid for the '24 Summer Games was met with low public support and an active opposition group.

Scant time remains for the organization to find another potential host city — the deadline to register interest with the International Olympic Committee is Sept. 15. But there is speculation Los Angeles could be in the running.

The absence of a U.S. candidate "would mean that there would only be one North American for the Games, and obviously that is a simpler situation," said John Furlong, who led the bid and the organizing committee for the Vancouver Winter Games.

"The lineup of cities in this particular round of bidding for the Summer Games is formidable but obviously it would make it a little bit easier," he said. "But Los Angeles and San Francisco would be very strong, I think, if they decided to get into it as well."

Paris, Rome, Budapest, Hungary, and Hamburg, Germany, have indicated they will apply. The winning city will be chosen in 2017.

Talk of a third Toronto Olympic bid has followed the city's successful Pan Am Games, which wrapped up Sunday.

Toronto Mayor John Tory said he wants to let the dust settle before making a decision, adding that officials will conduct a "careful analysis" to determine whether a bid is in the city's best interest. THE CANADIAN PRESS

FOCUS SHIFTS TO RIO

Feeling a summer-sport void now that the Pan American Games are over? It won't last long — the opening ceremonies for the 2016 Summer Olympics are just over 13 months away.

Canada's objective in Rio de Janeiro is a top-12 finish in total medals among the 200-plus participating countries.

For that to happen, Canada's divers, swimmers, rowers, wrestlers and paddlers need to come through, augmented by some track and field, cycling and trampoline medals.

"They're the bread and butter," Own The Podium chief executive officer Anne Merklinger said. "If we don't perform well in those sports in terms of multi-medal potential, then we're going to struggle to meet our targets."

Standing pat not an option as contract winds down

Alex Anthopoulos isn't likely to characterize it this way, but the next four days figure to be the most important of his career.

The Blue Jays' 38-year-old general manager is in the final year of his contract, while the man who hired him — team president Paul Beeston — is retiring at season's end. With a new boss on the horizon, it's tough to imagine Anthopoulos surviving another October on the outside looking in.

Meanwhile, his club is armed with the best offence in baseball, but held back by a mediocre pitching staff. With 62 games to go, they trail the first-place Yankees by 6.5 games and the second wild-card spot by three before Monday night's games.

Jays GM Alex Anthopoulos
TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE FILE

He is dealing with an anxious fan base, the longest postseason drought in professional sports and a restless core of players — some of whom publicly criticized his lack of action at last year's deadline.

Standing pat hardly seems an option this time around, but how much of the future is Anthopoulos willing to sacrifice to make a run in the present? We will find out sometime before Friday at 4 p.m.

As usual, the Jays have been linked to numerous teams and players, ranging from popular rentals, like Jeff Samardzija, to high-end closers, like Craig Kimbrel and Aroldis Chapman, and off-the-radar types, like Carlos Carrasco and Mike Fiers.

Anthopoulos's track record suggests he is reluctant to give up prospects and their multiple years of control for players on expiring contracts, like Samardzija. In fact, he has described the rental market as "the last aisle I want to shop in." TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

RESUMÉ

Anthopoulos has drafted well and rebuilt an ailing farm system. Measured minds may view his legacy in that light, but chances are most will judge him on what he pulls off — or doesn't — in the next few days.

Chelsea legend Montreal bound

MLS

Drogba will continue career at TFC rival

The latest big name to join Major League Soccer will land north of the border after the Montreal Impact officially acquired former Chelsea star and Ivory Coast international striker Didier Drogba on Monday.

"From the first conversation I had with him, I felt that he really wanted to play in Montreal," Impact president Joey Saputo said in a statement after the signing was confirmed Monday afternoon.

"This is one of the biggest days in club history, and his arrival to the club will be beneficial in every aspect."

Chicago Fire, which acquired the MLS rights to Drogba weeks ago after putting the 37-year-old on their "discovery" list, traded the striker in return for a "significant amount" of allocation money, said coach Frank Yallop in a statement.

Drogba, who started his career in France before moving to England to join the South London club, scored 164 goals, won four English Premier League titles and three League Cups with Chelsea during two stints with the club. He is a two-time winner of the league's golden boot award.

At the international level, Drogba is the all-time leading scorer for Ivory Coast's national team, a side he captained through three World Cups, with 65 goals. He retired from international soccer last summer.

It is believed Drogba, who speaks French, was attracted to Montreal because of the language.

In the wake of the deal with the Ivory Coast international falling through, Chicago signed Brazilian striker Gilberto, a designated player with Toronto FC last season, off waivers Monday.

Details of the Drogba deal have not been released, as per MLS policy, but ESPN reported Sunday he was offered an 18-month deal worth $3 million. He'll be the club's second designated player after Argentine midfielder Ignacio Piatti.

Drogba is expected to arrive in Montreal later this week and will officially join the roster after receiving his international transfer certificate and a Canadian work permit.

The Impact next face TFC at BMO Field on Aug. 29.

IT'S ALL IN THE STARS by Sally Brompton

Aries March 21 - April 20
If you enjoy being the boss then you'll get every opportunity to show off your leadership skills. But remember that being the boss is about more than just giving orders.

Taurus April 21 - May 21
The one thing you most want to avoid is the thing you must face up to today. Something that has been causing you a great deal of worry can now be dealt with but it will take a lot of courage on your part.

Gemini May 22 - June 21
Friends will go out of their way to help so don't just sit there like everything is fine. No matter how independent-minded you are, you still need a helping hand now and again.

Cancer June 22 - July 23
If you need to persuade someone to give you something you will no doubt be successful today. But they will give even more if you wait until Friday's full moon.

Leo July 24 - Aug. 23
So many things are going right now that you are beginning to believe a breakthrough is possible. It is. Keep dreaming about a brighter future. It won't be a dream for long.

Virgo Aug. 24 - Sept. 23
You may find it difficult to make up your mind today. Your problem is that you are worrying about things that will probably never happen. Lighten up a bit – life is supposed to be enjoyed.

Libra Sept. 24 - Oct. 23
Not only are you in tune with the spirit of the times but you believe you have found your special place and role in the world. It's good to feel you are doing something worthwhile. It's good to make a difference.

Scorpio Oct. 24 - Nov. 22
You need to find the courage to make a difficult decision. Keep reminding yourself that change is not something to be avoided.

Sagittarius Nov. 23 - Dec. 21
Approach the day in a positive frame of mind and you'll accomplish a lot. Approach the day with negativity and you'll accomplish the same amount but you won't get much joy from it.

Capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 20
If your instincts tell you you're on the right track then you must trust them. Let them guide you and the next few days will be a lot of fun.

Aquarius Jan. 21 - Feb. 19
Certain people may not deserve your support but you will give it anyway. Later in the week, when the moon is full in your sign, it is you who will need assistance. Think of good deeds as an investment.

Pisces
Feb. 20 - March 20
You must spend some time planning what you are going to do. It will enable you to get twice as much done as you would have had you rushed in and hoped for the best.
